“ I wrote this email to Priscilla today. I didn't know she had passed away. I'll share it here in hopes that her family finds some peace in it:

Hi Priscilla,

How are you? I hope you are happy and healthy and enjoying a beautiful Chicago summer!

I'm writing this email because I feel compelled to share:

You changed my life.

You were the first official editing client I ever had, and in 2020 when we reconnected I had been feeling very lost, stuck, and trapped. I had no idea what I wanted to do or even where I wanted to live. I was approaching thirty and feeling like I had no true skills or abilities to offer.

I remember that you encouraged me to make editing/writing a full-time career. It was your words of encouragement that led me to give it a shot. You helped me see my gifts.

Now, I'm living in the Netherlands near my sister and with a very supportive and loving partner. I run a content writing and editing business, and every day I help individuals and companies spread their message through writing and editing.

It's incredibly rewarding and I'm constantly humbled by the value people see in my work.

But you were the very first person to see value in what I do. And I am so grateful to you for taking a chance on me and encouraging me.

I know you always wanted your books to have an impact on others, you wanted to touch lives. I want you to know that in a way, by trusting me with them, they have. They've changed my life completely, and I'm forever grateful.

*With warm wishes,
Ciera*
